

Department of Psychology

The School of Social Sciences envisages to offer application-oriented programs with innovative curriculum and pedagogy.

The department of psychology aims at providing critical, practical and analytical training at the undergraduate, post graduate and Ph.D. level that enables students to further engage in the domains of mental health, neuroscience, forensics, rehabilitation, defense, prisons, government and nonprofit organizations. The program's curriculum has more of application-oriented learning and the curriculum mainly stresses on the mastery of basic principles of psychological theories.

Seminar Description

We are pleased to announce a one-day seminar on "Emerging trends in Forensic Psychology." This seminar is designed to provide students with a deep dive into the field of forensic psychology and its significant role in understanding criminal behavior. Renowned experts in forensic psychology have been invited to deliver insightful talks, each sharing their extensive knowledge and expertise on critical aspects of the field.

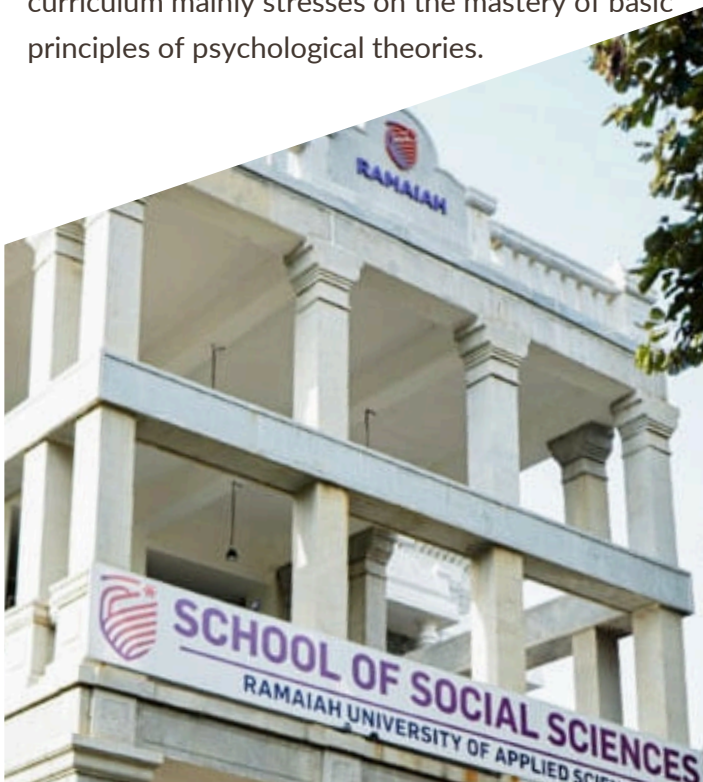

Throughout the day, students will have the opportunity to engage with professionals who work on the front lines of criminal justice, offering a unique perspective on how psychological principles are applied in real-world criminal investigations, profiling, and legal processes. The seminar aims to bridge academic learning with practical insights, giving students an invaluable glimpse into career possibilities and emerging trends within forensic psychology.
